Profiling VoMa: Assessing the Threat of an Armenian Paramilitary Group to the Region

Sümeyye Kaya UYAR***

Mustafa YILDIRIM****

This paper undertakes a comprehensive analysis of the paramilitary entity known as VoMa in Armenia, emerging as a novel threat and presenting challenges to regional stability. Despite its lack of scholarly attention, the group's potential regional implications for Azerbaijan and Türkiye necessitate focused examination. This research aims to shed light on VoMa's inter-group relations, foreign supporters and reported military activities to discern potential ramifications for regional security. Commencing with a comprehensive examination of VoMa's inter-group relations and external supporters, the study explores the latent threat posed by the group, which could significantly shape its trajectory and impact.

The paper delves into VoMa's reported military activities, as acknowledged by the Republic of Azerbaijan, to highlight any underreported incidents or trends that might hold implications for regional stability. By reassessing the threat posed by VoMa, this research seeks to address potential gaps in understanding and contribute to a more comprehensive appraisal of the group's regional significance. This paper serves as a timely reminder of the importance of scrutinizing emerging threats that may have been overshadowed by more prominent issues within academic studies. By drawing attention to the VoMa paramilitary group, the research aims to encourage a reevaluation of regional security priorities and foster a proactive approach to addressing potential challenges posed by this entity. Furthermore, the study provides an in-depth analysis of news coverage of VoMa available in the LexisNexis database. Through a meticulous examination of news reports, VoMa's website, and official statements from the Republic of Azerbaijan, the research seeks to provide a nuanced assessment of the tactical and strategic aspects of VoMa's operations and their impact on the security dynamics of the region.
